THE PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION.

Following along through the center of the grounds the Triumphal Causeway meets the gaze of the visitor. This is a great piece of architecture. The four pylons support mounted standard bearers, designed by an eminent sculptor, who also adorned the sides with groups denoting "Peace" and "Power." In other places are to be seen figures representing "Truth," "Justice," "Liberty," "Patriotism," "Hospitality," "Courage," "Benevolence," "Tolerance." Between the pylons are eight large bronze shields, covered with flags, spears and battle axes. Under this causeway is sufficient space for boats to pass through, the routes being lighted with electric lights. Beyond this causeway and on a point commanding the shore of the lake stands an equestrian statue of George Washington. To the left of this are the various State buildings with the buildings erected by the South American States. Across the lake is the life saving station and on the other side is the New York State building which is to be permanent. This pathway continues to the Lincoln Park or south entrance.

A trip along the plaza gives the visitor a good general idea of the grounds [and he would then wish to visit the] buildings in which the exhibits are to be seen. These we will describe in the order in which we visited them rather than with regard to their positions on the ground. The first building visited and the one of greatest interest to the writer, was the United States government building. In this building could be seen exhibitions by the war and navy departments, the state, interior, and the treasury departments and the department of justice and of labor; post-office exhibit, exhibit by Smithsonian Institute, agricultural exhibit and fisheries and the exhibit of the bureau of American Republics. The building in which this display is made is six hundred feet long and one hundred and thirty feet wide, and connected with it are two other buildings, one of which was used for the fisheries. These two buildings are but one hundred and fifty feet square. This building is a beautiful piece of architecture and with the plastic decorations and groups of statuary around it cannot fail to please the eye of the visitor. Rising above the main building is a dome the top of which is 250 feet in height, and above which is the figure of Victory. Outside of the building the war department has an exhibition of the big guns in use at the present time together with those of former days. Most prominent among these is a twelve inch breech loading gun weighing 115,000 pounds; the weight of the carriage is 383,000 lbs. This gun throws a projectile weighing 1,000 pounds, the charge of powder being 240 lbs. of smokeless, or 490 lbs. of the old style powder. It is forty-two feet in length and is one of the disappearing guns for use in harbor defence. At certain times each day the members of the artillery in their drills spent some time in showing how the gun is operated. Passing inside the visitor finds the exhibit of the war department to be very extensive. A large number of guns of various sizes are to be seen, also small arms in use in the several branches of the army. This department also shows models of pontoon bridges and defence works. The small arms in use in the U. S. army since the war of the revolution are shown, also models dressed in the uniforms in use in the army since that time. Instruments for use in wireless telegraphy were shown and operated and explained to the people. In this building can be seen models of the vessels in the United States navy and of the transports. The great harbor mines were shown. A deck of a vessel could be seen with models of the officers dressed in the uniforms of their respective rank. It also contains a model naval hospital showing how the wounded sailors are cared for. Among the things noted here was a topophone, an instrument to assist in determining the direction of sound, designed for use on vessels; large reflectors throwing colored lights, models of lighthouses and instruments for signalling long distances. United States coast and geodetic survey instruments for registering automatically the rise and fall of the tide were shown. Types of the American Indian and of the Esquimaux and their methods of living could be seen. Machines in which coins are stamped and paper money printed by the United States government were on exhibition. The department of the interior showed models of many of the great inventions of the age, and the handwork of many of the pupils at the government schools over the country. The department of justice showed photographs of the chief justices of the supreme court and gives much information regarding the workings of this court. The department of labor showed some of its different lines of work together with statistics showing the earnings of the laboring classes and dealing with subjects relating to the laboring class. Their charts show the course of prices from 1840 to 1900, together with much information regarding the great strikes, the number of men thrown out of employment, etc. The post-office department showed the methods of transporting mail over the country in contrast with those employed in our early history. The methods employed in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines are also shown. This department was especially interesting and attracted large crowds. The old Rocky Mountain coach was exhibited, the coach which was used in early days in the west and of which many thrilling tales could be recounted. In this building were countless other things which would be of interest to visitors at the exposition but which we cannot mention here.

The United States Agricultural building contained samples of the seed from all kinds of grain grown in this country and also the seeds from diseased plants showing the effects of the disease. It contained a fine showing of tobacco grown in the south and of the products of the island possessions. Agricultural implements in use there could be seen and seemed rather crude to the people of the states.

During the past week the court of inquiry has been listening to Admiral Schley's side of the case. This seemingly useless controversy is becoming wearisome in its details and is certainly not conducive to harmony among the naval officers.

Judge Stafford, who succeeded the late Judge Thompson, is proving to be as strong an advocate of the prohibitory law as was his predecessor. The judge is an earnest champion of the cause of temperance and evidently believes that the sale of liquor can be minimized by the enforcement of a prohibitory law rather than by a compromise in the form of local option.

Judges Favor Prohibition.

It is a fact which it is well to make a note of at the present time that every judge of the sprueme court of Vermont is a believer in the prohibitory law, and on every occasion where this law is in question every member of the court lends not only his judicial, but his personal influence for its enforcement. In several instances, as is well known, individual judges have done notable work in enforcing the law, and in creating and sustaining public sentiment in its favor.—Brattleboro Phoenix.

The opening chapters of a serial story entitled, "His Brother's Keeper," written by Chas. M. Sheldon, appear on page seven of this issue. This is one of Mr. Sheldon's best productions. It treats of the ever-present struggle between capital and labor and shows clearly the situation from the point of view of both the worker and the employer. It is a strong story, fascinatingly told, and cannot fail to be of interest to both old and young. The cost of this serial is nearly double that of the average and it is by far the best story that the MONITOR has ever published. We trust our readers will find it of interest.

Freight Trains Collide at Passumpsic.

Extra freight number 272 telescoped the way freight at Passumpsic Monday afternoon. Both trains were north bound. The accident occurred at the iron bridge near the gravel pit a mile below the Passumpsic station. The way freight had stopped to do its work there and had sent back a trainman to flag the extra which was following. The flag-man did not get back a sufficient distance to give due warning, before the extra, which was following close behind, came around the curve and crashed into the rear of the way freight at the end of the bridge. The way freight was manned by E. Ruggles, engineer, Fred Nelson, fireman, Ernest Brown, conductor, and Richard Corey, brakeman. Clinton Eastman of Lyndonville was engineer and Walden Ryther of New- port, fireman, on the extra. Both jumped before the crash came. Engineer Eastman, as he jumped, struck the side of the bridge and fell to the water below in a dazed condition. He came out of the wreck with an ugly scar across his forehead and a general shaking up. Fireman Ryther was not as fortunate. When he left the engine he was thrown violently against the abutment of the bridge and was badly bruised about the head and body. After the first shock of the collision had passed it was discovered that one man was missing. Bert Corey had been in the caboose at the time of the accident. After the crash the caboose had immediately taken fire and was quickly consumed. It was feared that Corey had been burned to death, but Tuesday forenoon he was found beneath the wreckage in the river. A savage wound on the back of his head told the story of his hasty summons to Eternity. He was 23 years of age and had been employed by the Swift beef company at St. Johnsbury, where he finished work Saturday night.

Aching Joints

In the fingers, toes, arms, and other parts of the body, are joints that are inflamed and swollen by rheumatism—that acid condition of the blood which affects the muscles also.

Sufferers dread to move, especially after sitting or lying long, and their condition is commonly worse in wet weather.

"It has been a long time since we have been without Hood's Sarsaparilla. My father thinks he could not do without it. He has been troubled with rheumatism since he was a boy, and Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine he can take that will enable him to take his place in the field." Miss Anna Dory, Sidney, Iowa.

42-44 G. M. CUTHBERTSON, Town Treas.

Pres. Kruger.

A. D. W. Wolmerans, one of the Boer envoys, who has been visiting Mr. Kruger at Nivtersum, found the mental condition of the former president of the Transvaal by no means satisfactory. Mr. Kruger is slowly growing weaker, physically and mentally. His slowness in reaching a decision on important questions was found to be a serious hindrance to those working in Europe in behalf of the Boer cause. With the slightest question regarding his health, Mr. Kruger exhibits intense irritation and vehemently denies anything wrong.
